Things to See and Do in and Around Tucson

When you visit Tucson, you won't be at a loss for things to do. To see one of the true symbols of the Southwest—the giant saguaro cactus—visit Saguaro National Park West. The Sonoran Desert is the only place where these majestic cacti grow. Tohono Chul Park is a 48-acre oasis filled with nature trails, gardens, palo verde trees and a recirculating stream. At the peaceful Tucson Botanical Gardens, you can learn about the many plants that thrive in southern Arizona.

The spectacular Arizona-Sonora Desert Museum features more than 300 species of animals and 1,300 kinds of plants. Here you might catch sight of the elusive Gila Monster, along with cougars, otters, bighorn sheep and plenty of creepy-crawlies. It also has a bird sanctuary, nature trails, a botanical garden, and a gem and mineral museum.

Southeastern Arizona is ranked one of the top five areas for birdwatching in the U.S., thanks to the climate and diversity of the terrain. Popular spots for birdwatching include Madera and Ramsey canyons.

Astronomers will be in heaven here. Kitt

Peak National Observatory has the world's three largest solar telescopes and offers tours of the facility, fascinating exhibits on astronomy and stargazing programs at night. For another stellar view, take a tour of the Fred Lawrence Whipple Observatory, one hour from Tucson.

An interesting attraction is Biosphere 2, where eight scientists once lived inside a three-acre, glass-enclosed, self-sustaining model of Earth. Now more of a historical attraction than a habitat, it's open daily for tours.

The luminescent Mission San Xavier del Bac just south of Tucson was constructed in the late 1700s. The "White Dove of the Desert" is one of the finest examples of Spanish mission architecture to be found.

Dubbed a "mini-mecca for the arts" by The Wall Street Journal, downtown Tucson boasts its own symphony, ballet, opera and theater companies, along with more than 215 other arts groups and organizations. Art lovers will want to check out DeGrazia's Gallery in the Sun, the former home and workshop of the renowned Tucson artist.

The Tucson Museum of Art features pre-Columbian artifacts, Spanish colonial art and furniture, and a wing devoted entirely to Western painting and sculpture. The Center for Creative Photography at the University of Arizona boasts the foremost collection of Ansel Adams in the country.

Forty minutes from downtown, the Pima Air and Space Museum is the biggest privately-funded air museum in the world with more than 200 vintage and modern aircraft.

After a day of hitting the museums, take to the greens. More than 35 courses are in the vicinity, with one of the best—The Golf Club at Vistoso—right around the corner.

For kids (or kids-at-heart) who've always dreamed of being cowboys, Old Tucson—part movie set, part Western theme park—is a must-see. If you want to visit the real thing, gallop on over to Tombstone, "The Town Too Tough To Die."

For Mexican treasures, crossing the border is simple. The drive to Nogales is 100 miles, and you can park in Arizona and cross the border by foot.

Driving Directions

From Tucson Airport

- Exit the airport onto Tucson Blvd, which turns into Benson Hwy.
- Turn right onto Kino Blvd N, then right onto I-10 W (toward Phoenix.)
- Travel on I-10 for approx. 20-miles and take Exit 240 (Tangerine Rd.)
