Things to See and Do in San Diego

San Diego offers, of course, the world-famous San Diego Zoo—with everything from giant pandas from China to pygmy chimpanzees from central Africa. And, in keeping with the animal theme, you can get splashed by a killer whale at SeaWorld.

You can also tour the city by boat, bus, or trolley, or stop by the Seaport Village for shopping and dining along the waterfront. These are just a few of the uncountable things you can do in San Diego.

Balboa Park, located .25 miles from the resort, is loaded with activities and sights for the whole family. Your best bet is to buy the Passport to Balboa Park, a coupon booklet that will get you into 13 museums (the two others are free of charge) and is good for one week. Just a sampling of the museums you'll encounter: San Diego Aerospace Museum, Museum of Photographic Arts, San Diego Hall of Champions Sports Museum, Mingei International Museum, and San Diego Historical Society Museum.

You'll also find the acclaimed Globe Theatres—where the annual summer Shakespeare Festival is held—as well as the Botanical Building and Lily Pond, eight gardens, the San Diego Zoo, a golf course, and several restaurants.

Sports fans have their pick of professional baseball, football, and hockey. Or, in this city's incredible climate and setting, you can partake in your own favorite sport, whether it's golfing, deep-sea fishing, rollerblading, bike riding, surfing, or sailing.

Downtown offers something for everyone. Meander the streets, shops, and restaurants of the turn-of-the-20th-century Gaslamp Quarter to see roughly 17 blocks of restored historical buildings. As you might imagine, the area takes its name from the lamps lining the streets.

Just north of Gaslamp is the Museum of Contemporary Art San Diego (MCA). After you peruse the changing and permanent exhibits, head north again to the Firehouse Museum. The kids will love this place, housed in San Diego's oldest firehouse. (And speaking of kids, if they're in tow, don't miss Legoland, located in Carlsbad, which combines 40 hands-on, interactive attractions, family rides, shows, and restaurants.)

Continue north on India Street, and it will take you right into the heart of Little Italy. You'll find eclectic shops, galleries, and many Italian restaurants. Keep your eyes peeled for the impressive and beautiful murals and paintings on many of the neighborhood's buildings.

Add Old Town, otherwise known as the "birthplace of San Diego," to your list of stop-offs. Shop the Bazaar del Mundo, a 1930s-era motel-turned-collection-of-shops, and stop for lunch at one of the area's many California-style Mexican restaurants. The bazaar is very popular with tourists, but well worth braving the crowds.

No trip to San Diego would be complete without a short drive over the San Diego-Coronado Bay Bridge to the island of Coronado. Rent a bike and tour the quaint community via the island bike path, and check out the famous historical Hotel Del Coronado and Coronado Beach.

And speaking of beaches, San Diego has 70 miles of sandy coastline and more than 30 official beaches. A few you should visit include: Ocean Beach, known as "Dog Beach" because pooches can roam freely; Mission Bay Park and its 27 miles of bayfront; Mission Beach, marked by the Giant Dipper roller coaster; Pacific Beach, the Venice Beach of San Diego; and Windansea Beach, where the best of the best go to surf.
